For 'is possible' is arranged similarly to 'is', and 'is' always and in all ways makes what it is added to in predication an affirmation, as in 'is not-good' or 'is not-white', or simply 'is not-this' (this too will be proved through what follows); with respect to their conversions, they will be like other (affirmative) premises.

Notes

"Of necessity does not belong": This means it is necessarily the case that A does not belong to B.

Ex: "The number two is of necessity not a mammal." →

• It's inherently impossible for 2 to be a mammal — this is a necessary non-belonging.

• So this expresses a strong and absolute denial — a universal, necessary negation.

"Does not necessarily belong": This means it is not necessarily the case that A belongs to B.
